Table of Content (incl the headings and page numbers of all chapters and the bibliography)
Abstract (between 150 and 250 words. Note: the abstract captures the most important information. It is as concise as possible, true to the original, well readable and can stand on its own.)

Optional (to clarify with your respective lecturer)
- List of figures
- List of tables
- List of abbreviations
- Glossary
- Affidavit/Declaration of Academic Integrity (usually used in final papers only)

1. Introduction (min 1 - max 1 ½ Page)

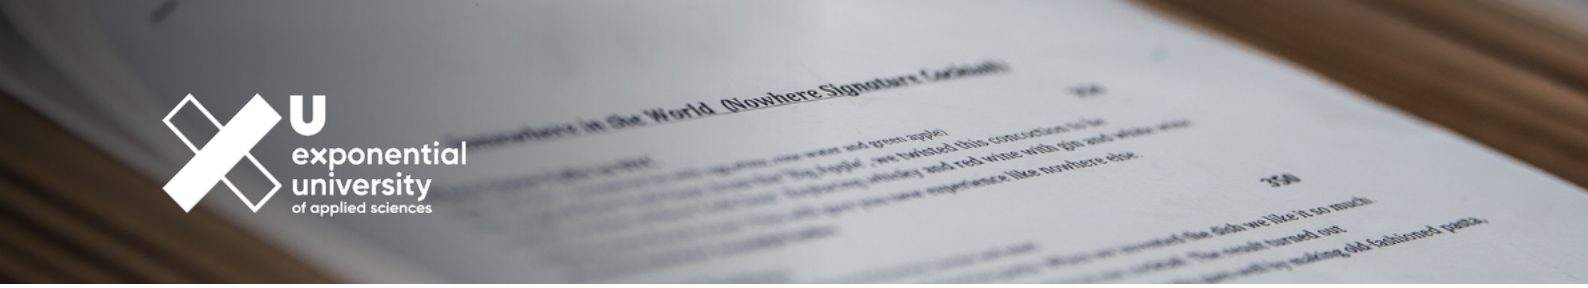

The introduction creates context for the subject and topic, it describes the structure of the paper, and establishes the paper's central argument or thesis. To tell the subject's story, insert historical or background information, definitions, facts or other hard data; you may also pose questions relevant to the topic. You describe the structure of the paper to provide a road-map for the reader. To establish the paper's central argument or thesis is often the most important component of a paper. Make your motivation and reasons for writing the paper explicit. Formulate a central argument or make a central claim in order to help the reader gain a better understanding of a particular subject.

2. Theory: State of Research and Academic Debate (min 7 – max 9 Pages)

This section is dedicated to a critical review of the literature pertinent to the chosen topic. Firstly you identify and read relevant literature. Secondly you extract and synthesise the main arguments, issues, findings and research methods which emerge from your literature review to build a coherent argument which leads to an in-depth understanding of the chosen topic.

3. Methodology or Use Case (min 2 – max 3 Pages)

In the methodology or use case section you explain precisely what you did and how you did it, allowing the reader the evaluate the reliability and validity of your inquiry. It includes a) the type of research you carried out, b) how you collected and/or selected your data and c) how you plan to process it.

4. Analysis & Discussion (min 4 – 5 Pages)

The purpose of the analysis and discussion section is to demonstrate what you discovered, i.e. your results, as well as to interpret and describe the significance of your findings in light of what was already known about the research problem or topic being investigated. It explains any new understanding or fresh insights about the research problem or topic, including reflections on the accuracy of the results and effectiveness of your investigation.

5. Conclusions (min 1 page – max 2 Pages)

The conclusion ties together, integrates and synthesizes the various issues raised in the previous chapters. It refers back to your introductory statement or claim and provides answers to the research question(s) of the paper. It identifies the theoretical and policy implications of the study with respect to the overall study area. It highlights the study limitations. It provides direction and areas for future research (outlook).

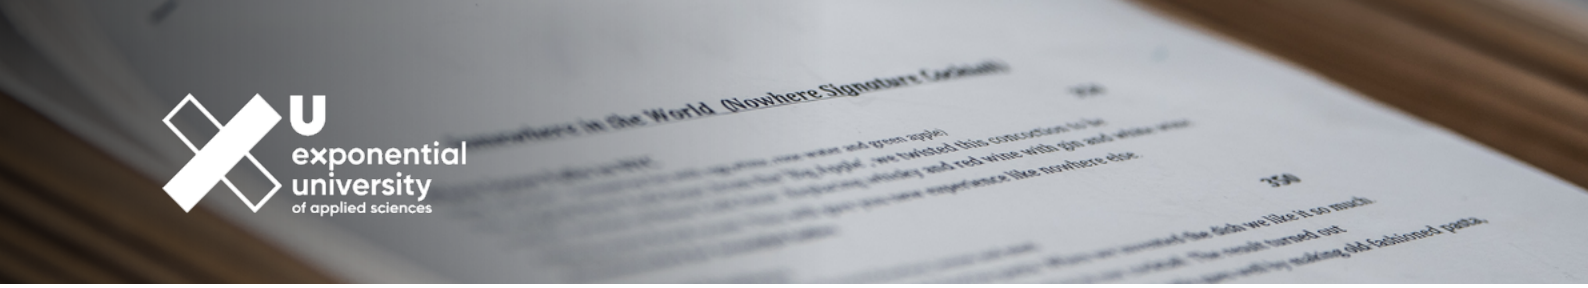

6. References

A reference list is a list of the publication information for the sources you've cited in your paper and is intended to give your readers all the information they need to find those sources. For the reference list please follow the APA 6th Style manual specifications.
